Special 'Welcome Back' Issue: What's new, old & missing around here?

The fold Advocate.jbu.edu JOHN BROWN UNIVERSITY'S STUDENT NEWSPAPER

Thursday, September 6, 2012

Issue 1, Volume 78

Siloam Springs, Arkansas

20

15

10

President escapes to Sydney

Esther Carey Managing Editor careye@jbu.edu

While this semester brings many additions to campus—construction by the dining hall and townhouses, new parking lots, a new incoming class—something will be missing: the president.

President Chip Pollard announced to students at the first chapel that he would be taking a sabbatical for three months in Sydney, Australia. His wife Carey and 15-year-old son James will accompany him.

In April, the Board of Trustees approved a sabbatical policy for upper level administration and then encouraged Pollard to consider taking one, Pollard said.

While Pollard is gone, his responsibilities will be divided between the members of his cabinet. Ed Ericson, vice president of academic affairs, and Steve Beers, vice president of student development, will speak at events such as visit days. Kim Hadley, vice president of finance and administration, will lead cabinet meetings which will mainly deal with the budget. Jim Krall, vice president of advancement, will do some speaking at fund raising events.

Sabbaticals are a normal part of university culture, Beers said. Since the president's job is mainly to give direction, leadership and vision, he does not have to manage most of the day-to-day issues as directly.

"The strength of our institution is what makes it possible for the president to be gone without the school missing out on anything as far as operations," Beers said.

Not having the president here to help facilitate communication between the cabinet members and provide a higher-level vantage point will probably be the biggest challenge, Beers added. In his absence, they may need to "over communicate" with one another to stay in touch with what is happening in the adwith what is happening in the administration.

Administration officials will try to protect the president's sabbatical by not pulling him back in to running the school, Beers said. At the same time, technology makes it easy to get ahold of him if a serious need should arise.

"We have a strong cabinet and a strong board," Beers said. "I am assuming it will go well." The presidential duties are typically paired with a cabinet member anyway, Ericson pointed out. In addition, most of the current vice presidents have participated in the University's administration for longer than Pollard has been here.

There are some things the president will miss, Ericson said. He will not speak in chapel, participate in Mock Rock skits or attend the fall board meetings. But he will be back in time for Candlelight and December graduation.

Pollard's goal is to not check his University email, he said. Instead, his administrative assistant will send

See POLLARD on page 3

University achieves zero landfill status

Laura Roller Copy Editor rollerl@jbu.edu

John Brown University officially

it is saving the University and its students money.

Waste that cannot be recycled is taken to Covanta Energy in Tulsa, Okla. where it is safely burned to create steam. The steam is sold or facilities services director, the University has at least a 20-year history of recycling, beginning with use of a cardboard compactor. The campus was already baling and selling paper and cardboard when Brankle reached zero landfill status as of July 2.

Fai

Instead of sending waste to a landfill, which costs about $50,000 per year, the University sought creative ways to recycle or dispose of all trash without a scrap ending up in landfills, at about half the cost of standard trash removal. Not only is this better for the environment, used to create electricity.

Students returning to campus may notice some changes. Dumpsters have disappeared. Blue recycle bins dot the campus, including each dorm room. Faculty and staff empty their own office trash cans. Workstudy students sort recyclables at the Facilities Services building.

According to Steve Brankle, arrived in 1997.

About four years ago, nearby businesses such as La-Z-Boy, McKee Foods and Dayspring started becoming zero landfill, spurring the city of Siloam Springs and other organizations to become more aware of sustainability issues. Currently,

See ZERO on page 2

Big,

LAUREN ADDINGTON/ The Threefold Advocate

Donna Rollene belts out a beautiful note in her final graduate soprano performance Aug. 30 at the Berry Performing Arts Center. Go online at http://advocate.jbu.edu to read more.

Men answer audition call

Kendra Chester

Staff Writer chesterk@jbu.edu

It was raining men at auditions for this year's freshman drama production. Jan Lauderdale, adjunct drama professor, was surprised when 12 men showed up to audition for "Sarah, Plain and Tall." Lauderdale rejoiced at the turnout, finding parts for every one of them.

Having enough men for drama productions has been an issue in John Brown University's past. Two years ago, Lauderdale was forced to switch from her planned "Arsenic and Old Lace" to a different show with an all female cast, "Steel Magnolias," when only one male came to auditions.

When selecting a show takes so much time, having to find a new one on short notice can be devastating.

"It's the biggest part of what I do, definitely the most time consuming," says Lauderdale.

For the freshman show, the amount of male parts greatly influences her selection process. She looks for plays that have six or less males with some flexibility. For "Sarah, Plain and Tall," a minimum of five guys was needed, but Lauderdale was able to place all 12 freshmen guys in the show, which will be preformed for two weekends in September and October.

Lauderdale attributed the high male turnout to her hard work and new method in spreading the word about auditions.

"I was more proactive about getting the word out, and that paid off," she said.

In the past, she relied on previous cast members to encourageparticipation by incoming freshman. This method brought in two relatives this fall.

This was the first year Lauderdale signed up students at ERP and followed up with emails about audition times.

Freshman Connor Gooderl, who will play the part of Ephraim, spoke with Lauderdale when he came for a visit.

"I love the camaraderie of being part of the cast. It's almost like a family," Gooderl said.

The increase in communication brought growth to the drama department as well: four new freshmen, three women and one man, declared drama minors this fall, an amazing addition to the former lone drama minor.

Lauderdale's response to the growth of the drama department was that "it's blossoming because I have finally found the best way to get the word out."

The hardest part of casting is deciding on callbacks, Lauderdale said.

"I don't like to turn anybody away. I have a lot of talent that turns up," she said.

She makes her selections based on chemistry between actors. This play allowed her to keep all the males that showed up, since one actor could have played quite a few parts.

The freshman production was created five years ago to eliminate competition for actors between the musical and the play, but musical director, Donna Rollene, did not have the same male turnout as Lauderdale at her auditions in the spring. Her reaction was "utter disappointment" since she has "never had that happen so drastically."

Rollene reevaluated over the summer and switched her choice to "You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown," which has a smaller cast and gives her flexibility to have a male or female Snoopy.

INDEX Opinion 4/5 News 2/3 Lifestyles 6/7 Sports 8/9 Spotlight 10 BLACK PLATE 15 10

EWS The Threefold Advocate

University celebrates community, Hutchesons

15

20

10

Shelby Delay

Opinions Editor

delays@jbu.edu

Busy and energetic students have filled the resident hall that sits at the bottom of the hill on the north side of campus for over eight years. These students have formed traditions, fostered community, and loved the building where they spend their lives at John Brown University.

Although the memories of the building are life-long, the name 'North Hall" has always been temporary.

This summer, North Hall was given a new name-Hutcheson Hall- to better honor longtime donors and friends of the University community.

Bill Hutcheson served as a member of the University Board of Trustees from April 1996 to April 2008 and was then named a Trustee Emeritus. Hutcheson and his wife also donated a large portion of the funds needed to build the dormito-

"Bill and Dede [Hutcheson] have never sought the spotlight or recognition for their service to JBU," said Andre Broquard, director of resident life. "They are sincerely humble, wanting only to celebrate the lives of JBU students. This summer, the Advancement office asked Bill and Dede if JBU could honor them by putting their name on the building and they graciously accepted."

Broquard hopes that the Hutcheson's generosity and gracious spirit can become a hallmark of the building and for the students who live there.

During the all-hall welcome back meeting on Aug. 22, President Pollard told the residents of

JONATHAN DANIEL/The Threefold Advocate

30

20

15

September 6, 2012

10

President Pollard dedicates the newly renamed Hutcheson Hall. After eight years the University renamed North Hall "Hutcheson Hall" in honor of the family which donated the majority of the money needed to build the hall.

Hutcheson Hall that Bill and Dede Hutcheson wanted the building to be a place that students could call a home away from home.

The Hall then celebrated Bill and Dede's generosity to campus and the building's new name with cake and ice cream.

Community has become an important trait of the building and the residents. Students say the idea of a "home away from home" is more of a reality than a wish.

"I started living in North my sophomore year," senior Katy Rogers said. "I really like the community here. I remember a conversation I had with a friend in the past, how each dorm on campus seems to have its own particular personality that attracts certain people, and I really like the personality and vibe of Hutcheson."

For senior and resident assistant Austin McCullough, the community truly feels like coming home.

"I can get to my hall and laugh, study, cry, pray and anything else with people who I know care about me and accept me just the way I am, both girls and guys," McCullough said

Because of the home-like atmosphere and students' strong ties to the building, the initial news of the building's name change, which came in late July, was a shock to most students, and in return sparked some negative feelings.

"Initially, I was very opposed to the new name," Rogers said. "Being on the edge of campus, the name North just fit and also kind of added to the personality of the dorm. After hearing the story of the name change though, I became much more appreciative of it."

Growing in community and in Christ-likeness is the central theme of the whole dorm this year. The resident life staff of Hutcheson Hall adopted 2 Corinthians 5:17 as the theme verse for the building.

"Being careful to not take the verse out of context, it is a call to live a new life 'in Christ.' The grace that comes through Christ is available for us," Broquard said. "The newness comes at the point of salvation, but also is new every morning as we are continually renewed and refined to be more like Christ. I hope that those living in Hutcheson this year will live 'in Christ' and continue their transformation into Christ's likeness.'

Faculty gathers to redefine academic rigor

In the Bubble Crystal Bridges Tour

Students will join alumni and

Jamie Odom Staff Writer

Attendees of the second option and described ways to increase read a rather controversial book, student success, such as Student pline-leadership-when the different departments discussed how friends of the University for a Crystal Bridges tour on Sept. 7, from 6:30-8:30 p.m. Tour will be followed by coffee and desserts.

Heroes vs. Villains

Students can skate as their favorite superheroes or villains in Springdale on Sept. 7, 11 p.m. to Sept. 8, 1 a.m. Cost: $1 at the door.

Out of the Bubble

Isaac leaves damage cnn.com Sept.4

Hurricane Isaac tore through the Gulf area, damaging over 13,000 homes. Some areas are still experiencing flooding.

Evacuated residents may now return to their homes to survey the damage.

Organic not healthier

nydailynews.com Sept. 4

Standford researchers recently finished a large-scale study on the nutritional value of organic foods compared to conventional food, and found organic food was almmost no different.

The only notable difference between the two was organic's 30 percent lower levels of pesticide, though conventional food was also within safe limits.

Syrians surge across borders

bbc.com Sept. 4

Syrian refugee numbers reached an all-time high the month of August, at roughly 100,000 people fleeing to Jordan or Turkey.

Refugee camps are struggling to supply aid to all the Syrians seeking asylum, as the Red Cross and other humanitarian efforts were not initially prepared for so many refugees.

odomj@jbu.edu

During the second week of August, 30 to 40 John Brown University faculty members came together for a Summer Institute to rediscover what it means for a Christian university to be academically rigorous.

Faculty members could choose between two workshops. One workshop discussed the spiritual formation of students. The second workshop was led by Rob Norwood, Cal Piston, Mandy Moore and Nick Ogle, and focused on the topic of academic challenge.

ZERO continued from Page 1

the city is the University's biggest recycling and sustainability partner.

"It says something about JBU, that we think this is important," said Brankle.

But the school can only do so much without students getting passionate about recycling and doing their part. It is about changing a culture, said Brankle.

"I can't make you recycle. But if we can make it easy enough to recycle, maybe students will," he said.

Rachel Penna, Derek Stout, Hannah Daughtery and Hannah Neel are a few of the students who collect and sort the recycled materials. These students said they often find items misplaced, such as glass bottles in the plastics bin in J. Alvin dorm.

Their advice to other students is "make sure you put the right things in there."

To better communicate with students, Facilities Services

30

20

"Academically Adrift," which takes a cynical look at the academic structure of American collegiate level learning.

While "Academically Adrift" contends that a college degree is worthless and students who attend a university do not actually grow in their critical thinking levels, writing skills or basic reasoning, the workshop dissected and attacked these ideas.

Norwood, Piston, Ogle and Moore discussed the areas where higher education impedes student learning, explored effective communication methods, presented various resources available to faculty and students Support Services or faculty assistance.

According to Cary Balzer, director of faculty development, the goal of this redefinition of academic rigor is to "improve student learning at JBU."

Becci Rothfuss, who attended both workshops, said that the Summer Institute is one of her favorite parts about being on staff at the University because it is the only time that faculty members from all different departments get together.

Rothfuss said she had fun learning about techniques used by math and English professors that she can apply to her disciacademic rigor relates to their specialties.

During one of the workshop's group sessions, the presenters challenged attendees to implement a variety of changes into their own system of teaching. Rothfuss' final project was a revolutionized syllabus, which demonstrated the style of academic prowess that she expects from her leadership students.

Rothfuss said she is excited to see the ways that the new definition of academic rigor will help to "stretch students beyond their original capacities to do something that they didn't think they could do."

contacted Students in Free Enterprise about beginning a Zero Landfill project, which started in fall 2011.

SIFE students created banners, posters, video, awareness, and contests to promote recycling across campus.

This year SIFE plans to help support recycling initiatives at campus events, such as the TP game, and to continue raising awareness, according to Obed Diaz, SIFE project leader.

Diaz said his view of recycling has changed since he began working with the project. "I realized how much trash we wasted," he said.

Diaz says recycling is a good way to be aware of your duty.

"I am studying right now to have a good job and to have a good family and to support my family in a better way," Diaz explained. "So recycling is just like living this legacy for, maybe, my sons. Because if I am not aware of that, I just waste and leave trash. It is not just being a good student, but a good steward of the environment."

10

15

Where do JBU recyclables go?

Paper	City of Siloam
Plastics (1,2)	City of Siloam
Plastics (3-7)	Local businesses
Glass	City of Siloam
Metals	JBU keeps, sells for a profit
Plastic bags	City of Siloam
Batteries	Lowe's
Light bulbs (contanining mercury)	Waste management is paid to take these
Aerosol cans	Punctured to remove propellant, metal is sold
Kitchen grease	Converted to biodiesel and used for JBU lawnmowers
Vehicle oil	Auto Zone
Other waste	Covanta Energy produces steam from solid waste
Food scrapes from kitchen	Hog farm as feed

KARA UNDERWOOD/The Threefold Advocate

20

CYAN PI ATF

MAGENTA PLATE

30

BLACK PLATE 15 10

10

NEWS The Threefold Advocate

20

15

Construction creates space for students

AJ Miller Staff Writer millera@jbu.edu

Students this semester are establishing new routines, dodging construction sites as they go.

Nabholz Construction Services began construction of Simmons Great Hall, and John Brown University is preparing the North Slope Apartments site.

Faculty hope the new facilities will be worth construction's inconvenience, providing better facilities and more space to manage anticipated growth.

Simmons Great Hall will have both nmore seating and a lobby designed to serve as a front door to campus, said Steve Beers, vice president of student development. When people visit, the new expansion will provide a more obvious entry to campus.

The lobby will extend past the glass doors that now face the construction, and continue to the west edge of the existing Kresge Dining Hall, said Aramark Director Stephen Kerr.

According to Beers, the University plans for Simmons Great Hall to generate some additional revenue, though not enough to make a large difference for student expenses.

Beers said donors provided $5.5 million for construction of the expansion. That includes potential renovations, as the University plans to convert the Administrative Dining Room above the cafeteria into office space. Donors also gave a $1.25 million endowment to offset operating expenses.

Steve Brankle, facilities ser-

ANA SAMAYOA/The Threefold Advocate

Construction at the Chapman Adminisration Building and Mabee University Center will eventually create the Simmons Great Hall. and addition to the building. The banquet hall will be completed by the end of June 2013.

vices and sustainability director, said the University plans for Simmons Great Hall to be completed by the end of June 2013.

Sophomore Adam Lundy expected the expansion to be good for the campus. He said having a separate hall for prospective students and visitors might give the school a more professional appearance.

Brankle said construction on the North Slope Apartments will begin after all the subcontractors have been notified and receive their contracts.

Donors also gave $2.75 million for the North Slope Apartments' construction and the apartments should be finished by the fall semester of 2013, said

Beers.

André Broquard, director of residence life, expects high demand for the new apartments. The apartments will allow seniors to stay on campus while living in a more independent environment.

Seniors play an important role in communicating what the University is about to incoming students, Broquard said. When seniors live off-campus, they cannot do that as well.

While waiting for the new buildings' added benefits, however, students have to deal with the noise and dirt.

Senior Becca Masters lives right next to the construction site. This is Masters' second year in her townhouse, and she was not happy to return to construction out her back door.

Masters said she missed the grassy hill where the construction site now sits.

"It made living in the townhouses really cool," she explained. "We had this really nice backyard, and you could go out there and throw a Frisbee around or just sit."

Masters understands that the school is doing the construction for incoming students. She said she appreciates some things that have come from the University's construction, such as Windgate Visual Arts East, which she uses for her major, digital media arts.

North Slope Apartments site workers encountered complications and were not able to turn electricity and water on in time for the arrival of student leaders, said Bryan Cole, townhouse residence director. Students were moved to Walker while workers finished on the lines. Cole said telephone lines were also down, but are now back up.

Cole asked workers to give him as much warning as possible with anything that will affect students. In the past Nabholz has done well at communicating with the school, and he expects that to remain the same. He said that any other shut-offs would probably affect the bottom four townhouses, since they are on the same line as the future apartment complexes.

Cole said he would have to cancel or rework some townhouse events, like the barbecue and the slip 'n' slide. He plans to hold the barbecue off campus this year.

Cole hopes that once the apartments are finished, they will make the north slope into a larger community. The new apartments will create a circle and give all of the townhouses and apartments one central, open area that can be used for gatherings.

Rick Mason, a Professional Cabling Solutions employee, has been working to install lines for the new apartments. Mason said he has been working for the University off and on for eight or nine years. "A lot more doors are open since all of these new facilities have come in," he said. "It's really satisfying to see how much [the campus has] grown."

POLLARD continued from Page 1

him a report every couple of weeks. Cabinet officials will be able to include any questions for him. "I have felt dry coming to the well recently," Pollard said. "I want to use this time to renew myself intellectually, spiritually and physically." Pollard's wish list for his time in Sydney includes rereading some literature books such as King Lear and reading theological books by Henri Nouwen and Tim Keller. He also plans to write for a couple of hours a day, testing out ideas he has for potential book projects. These include reflecting on loss or looking at ideas about leadership found in literature. The family is looking forward to the adventure of being in a completely different place, Pollard said. They may go to see the Barrier Reef or do other sightseeing. They will be living half way between the beach and the University of Sydney, where a longtime friend of Pollard's serves as chancellor. "We are grateful to the board for this opportunity," Pollard said. "It is a gift and a blessing to be able to do it." Senior Kelsey Daugherty, Student Government Association president, said she did not think Pollard's absence would affect the running of the school. "The cabinet is more than capable of doing what needs to be done in order to keep campus going as it has been," she said. "I think the biggest difference students will notice will be not having the ability to see and interact with the Pollards on a daily basis, which is something I know the campus community enjoys. We hope that they have a restful and productive time in Australia and look forward to their safe return."

BLACK PLATE

15

Summer renovations brighten, update LRC

Taylor Alison

cially the web. Thus, a student prominent," Smith said. who wants to work in commuprominent," Smith said. The Threefold Advocate is working on a digital site where content can be updated immediately so that students do not have to wait until Thursday for news.

added storage cabinets to make up for lost space.

Staff vvriter

alisont@jbu.edu

This summer the Learning Resource Center underwent long-awaited renovations, including updating the bathrooms, adding storage space to the Media Lab, purchasing computers and creating a new convergent newsroom, the Triangle.

The Triangle houses the Threefold Advocate, which moved from the Honors house. The newsroom replaces the theater-style classroom, 121.

"Before I came to work here, I worked with the division chair and the department on the idea of the Triangle," said Marquita Smith, head of the communication department. "There was going to be a need for a multiplatform newsroom and a redesign of the curriculum."

Smith said today's organizations want to work through several platforms--social media websites like Facebook and Twitter, TV, radio and espenications will probably find the job also requires a good understanding of web and social media.

The new location is more accessible for staff and students. The communication department is preparing its students for the changing times in the communications world. For example, an emphasis on digital journalism stresses a multiplatformed education, as opposed to a more traditional print medium.

Four of the new emphases will reflect the old majors in the department. The five emphases are Digital Journalism, Radio/TV/Web, Public Relations, Social Advocacy and Multi-Context. The department will continue to offer a drama minor.

Opportunities for communication students include: the Threefold Advocate, KLRC, Speech and Debate Team, JBU TV 5 and Golden Eagle Productions.

"This program is vital and Senior Anali Reyes said she was a little taken aback when she saw the new space.

"We went from being in a back room of the Honors house to a modern facility actually located on campus," Reyes said. "The central location will not only bring us closer to the other communication majors but also lets people know who we are and, most importantly, that we exist."

This newsroom is in a safer location for students working on the paper.

"I wanted them to have a secure environment to work in," Smith said, adding that The Nesher, the University yearbook, also moved to the communication department.

The Media Lab is also enjoying newly remodeled space, said Ben Benton, coordinator of information technologies. It

J. PABLO/The Threefold Advocate

SeniorsJenny Redfern, Adrianne Karasek, Juniors Sidney Van Wyk, Kelsey Gulliver, and others settle in to their new space, which was renovated by the University over the summer and contains new equipment for communications students.

Ed Ericson, vice president of academic affairs, and Kim Hadley, vice president for finance and administration, found some funds to allow for the Media Lab to build cabinets along the back wall, Benton said.

Anali Reyes

"We have also gutted out the closet behind the front desk to allow for more room," he said.

The Information Technology department also purchased four new computers that are now available for use in the library.

The bathrooms throughout the LRC have been updated as well. The old retro décor is now coordinated with the school's colors. The greys, light blues, and dark blue give the LRC a more modern feel.

Mary Habermas, director of library services, said they had been asking for renovations to be made on the bathrooms in the LRC lobby.

"There are always prospective students and their families going on tours through the LRC," Habermas said. "I thought it would be nice for them to have more modern facilities, and the restrooms were in need of renovations."

The broadcast studio has also been improved to meet industry standards.

The renovations are a vote of confidence for the department, Habermas said.

MAGENITA PLATE

DITORIAL

The Threefold Advocate

This is who we are

TIPS AND IDEAS FROM THE THREEFOLD ADVOCATE

Welcome to campus, whether it is your first semester or your tenth. As you are settling into the routine of the school year, The Threefold Advocate wants to offer its ideas about what John Brown University is and some tips about how to get the most quality out of your time here.

Our school's motto refers to the threefold mission of Head, Heart and Hand. Here we address those three and what they mean to us.

Head

The University advertises its academic excellence. Whether this involves participating in the Honors Scholars Program or creating a robot in an engineering class, opportunities abound to increase your knowledge.

Tip: Keep your head in the game. Even when you would rather not be sitting in a class about English literature, there is information available which can shape your thinking. Our school also offers a unique forum for public dialogue. This does not mean there is always a clear winner, but rather this is a place where people can apply God's truth in every area of their lives.

Heart

"Worship doesn't just happen in chapel services at JBU; it pervades all of life as we seek to do everything for the glory of God and in service of others," says the University's website. From the athletic field to discussions in the dorm room, this community offers an opportunity to grow in our relationship with Christ and others.

Tip: Take your time here as a chance to make your beliefs your own. There are plenty of ministries on campus to help you develop. At the same time, do not be afraid to ask questions since college is a step in the process of gaining independence.

Hand

The University is not only about what happens on campus, but also about participating in society. Students can find many ways to get plugged in, such as CAUSE ministries and mission trips.

Tip: Find one or two things that you are really passionate about and just go all out. We need students who want to make a difference here and in the Kingdom of God.

We want to wish you the best possible semester and hope that you are able to find a place to plug in, stand out and invest.

Welcome to The Threefold Advocate's Op/Ed pages.

We are excited to start a new school year with our diligent readers. If you are new, we invite you to continue to join us every Thursday, as we share varied points of views and commentary on what's going on in and out of the bubble.

As a college newspaper, our main goal is to provide the student and staff community with news items that are relevant to them.

We decided to take the time in our first issue of the year to give you a quick round-up of what you can expect from us.

Importance goes past print

Except for this one old man. After I stated my goal, he responded with a lengthy diatribe about the journalism industry and its imminent demise. "Won't find many jobs in that industry, will you?

I braved my best smile and nodded when appropriate-I had to keep my job for at least one more month. And, when he was done, I did my best not to burst into tears. No, journalism doesn't provide the highest salary or the best job security, but it's where God has called me. I'm doing my best to follow. But since that moment, I've become more and more convinced that journalism is not on the road to destruction. With the digital age, fewer people may be reading print, but the need for journalists still exists. People may not need newspapers, but people still need government watchdogs, a source for current events, a place to voice their opinion and entertainment. Journalism will always exist, just not in the same form it does today. With that being said, the Threefold Advocate is doing it's best to keep up with the times. Last semester we debuted our new website, and this semester we are working to keep it continuously updated with the news students need and want.

There's just one problem. If the Threefold Advocate is truly going to be JBU's student newspaper, we need to hear from the students. We aren't only here to provide the news, but to inspire change, start conversations andin a sense-be a watchdog on campus.

The pieces that you will see in this column are the opinion in consensus of our Editorial Board. They are anonymous because they represent a collective effort.

From time to time, there is confusion as to how much of what is published in these two pages ais the opinion of the newspaper. We want to emphasize to our readers that the views expressed by columnists, cartoonists, or in letters to the editor are not necessarily endorsed by our editorial staff.

We love hearing back from our readers. If you have a response to anything published in our pages or anywhere else in the newspaper, please let us know. Send your letters to the editor to either JBU Box 2501 or to advocate@jbu.edu by 6 p.m. on Monday. We ask that you keep your comments to fewer than 300 words. (Note: this information will appear in every issue, right below)

You can always let us know what you think on the web. Look for our Facebook page as "Threefold Advocate" and start interacting with us.

Once again we thank you for reading us, and if you ever have questions or comments, do not hesitate to contact us at advocate@ jbu.edu, or DeLayS@jbu.edu.

Happy reading!

Threefold Advocate

advocate.jbu.edu -

The Threefold Advocate invites you to submit a signed letter to the editor. We ask that you keep your comments to fewer than 300 words, and we reserve the right to edit for space and appropriate content. The writer's phone number, classification and hometown must be provided. E-mail or mail letters by 6 p.m. on Monday.

VIEWS EXPRESSED BY COLUMNISTS OR IN LETTERS ARE NOT NECESSARILY THE VIEWS OF THE PUBLISHER, ADVISER OR STAFF.

CONTACT US

E-mail | advocate@jbu.edu Mail I JBU Box 2501 2000 W. University Street Siloam Springs, Ark. 72761

Esther Carey - Managing Editor Adrianne Redding - News Editor Kelsey Gulliver - Lifestyles Editor Shelby DeLay - Opinions Editor Sidney Van Wyk - Sports Editor Jon Skinner - Sports Editor J. Pablo Garcia - Photo Editor Kara Underwood - Visual Art Director Laura Roller - Copy Editor Anali Reyes - Ad Director Marquita Smith - Adviser

STAFF Jenny Redfern - Editor-in-Chief

STAFF WRITERS AJ Miller, Taylor Alison, Hannah Wright, Abby Chestnut, Jamie Odom, Kendra Chester, Lacey Fryer

CONTRIBUTING PHOTOGRAPHERS Ron Asbill Abby Chestnut Stephanie Willis Lauren Addington Ana Samayoa Sergio Arguello

The Threefold Advocate would like to clarify that editorials, those pieces in the column above this paragraph, are the opinion of the editorial board. They are therefore not attributed to individual writers. The writings to the right, with mug shots and pithy headlines, are columns. Each is the sole opinion of the mug shot's owner. On occasion, readers wishing to respond to an article or to express a viewpoint will write a letter to the editor. The opinion pages serve as a community bulletin board and are meant to continue the dialogue about various issues relevant to the JBU community. Please write. We want your input.

Jenny Redfern

This summer I did what most aspiring journalists would do for their last summer of college. I worked at a bank. The holding company of a bank, to be more precise. My measly desk was right next to the CFO's office and down the hall from the CEO's office.

Needless to say, I spent most of my summer surrounded by very wealthy people. And these very wealthy people would often ask me the question most people ask seniors in college: What will you do after graduation?

When I gave my go-to answer, "I don't know, but I want to be a magazine journalist," most did their best to sound interested and encourage me on my selected career path.

So here's what you can do:

Follow us. Go 'like' our 1. Facebook page and follow our Twitter account. Not everything we write will come out in print. Keep up with the latest campus news through the web.

2. Read us. Open up our pages and click on our links. You won't find every story completely interesting, but you will be surprised at what's happening around campus.

Talk to us. Join the con-3. versation. Want to respond to what you're reading? Write letters to the editor-that's meleave comments on the stories or write a post on our Facebook wall. Don't just be an observer. Engage in what is happening on your campus.

Redfern is a senior majoring in journalism. She can be reached at RedfernJ@jbu.edu.

got opinions?

Chances are you do. Let your voice be heard. Write for the opinion pages.

For more information email us at: advocate@jbu.edu or delays@jbu.edu

10

OPINIO The Threefold Advocate

15

20

30

Mexico es mi amor

Chelsea Bartlett

This summer I did my internship at Casa Kim, an orphanage in Tekax, Yucatan in Mexico and I could not have been more excited. When I landed at the airport in Cancun I had several expectations of what my time in Mexico was going to look like, and let's just say that my ideas and the Lord's did not match up.

Throughout my stay at Casa Kim, the Lord really taught me three things. First, missions is not glamorous. Second, you must completely die to yourself. Finally, I wondered what this experience looks like back home - where I am comfortable.

I thought I grew up with a pretty good understanding of what missions looks like. I went on all of the mission trips that were offered at my church from elementary through high school. The problem with these little trips is that in no way do they prepare you for the actual mission field. During these week-long trips you usually stay in a pretty decent facility and do work in the morning and have the evenings to yourself.

"Learning a new culture is always difficult to do, but being thrown into a completely different way of life is shocking."

Now, I am in no way knocking these trips, but as I was leaving for my trip, I had glamorized view of what I would be doing. I expected that I would live at the orphanage with the kids the whole month I was there. What completely threw me off guard was that almost everything was in one room and I was going to literally live life Bartlett is a senior majoring in not get my own space, and privacy reached at BartlettC@jbu.edu was very limited for me during my time there. Privacy is a common American practice, but I learned quickly that I was not in North America.

10

Learning a new culture is always difficult to do, but being thrown into a completely different way of life is shocking. I had to learn that my way of thinking and upbringing were not the supreme way of doing things. I had to learn how to serve and love these people in their own culture and language.

During this time, I had to trust the Lord and draw from his strength every day or I knew I would burn out quickly. The Lord was so faithful to me during this month and I could not have done what I did without his constant guidance. It was such a beautiful trip and I am so grateful I had the privilege to love the children there. However, this only begins to scratch the surface. I took a lot away from my time in Mexico and I am continuing to learn all that the Lord showed me.

with the children and staff. I did child and family studies. She can be

Adventures Abroad

The heart of Georgia

Karissa Riffle

I have never experienced a culture so defined by its own history. All around there are little reminders of the past, whether it's the towering, haphazardly placed, blocks of Soviet-built flats, the Russian script still found on the trains and buses, or the antiquated churches that occasionally peek through the modern architecture. Georgians are a people united by suffering.

For centuries, armies have been vying for this little piece of land that forms the gateway between the East and the West, Asia and Europe. Almost since the dawn of Christianity in the region, the people have been persecuted for their faith. But in spite of the hardship, Christianity has remained a central part of their cultural identity. And they remember. In some ways this memory of bad times, holds them together as a people and as Christians. The icons and painted portraits in the churches, along with the burning candles, were like symbols of hope, reminders of God's faithfulness.

Georgians are among the kindest, most hospitable people I have ever met. Mary is a friend I met when she was a foreign exchange student at my high school. I stayed with her family for 2 weeks in Georgia before coming to Lithuania to study for the fall. Mary took care of me like I was her sister, guiding me across the street through the crazy Georgian traffic. Her mother, grandma and sisters treated me like a member of their own family.

When I arrived at my friend's house in Tbilisi (teh-bee-lee-see) bread), meat pie, some light, yummy layered cake, and tea, I got some much needed rest. However, even sleeping was a new experience! Because of the lack of air conditioning and the warm weather, it was necessary to leave the bedroom window open. As a result, the sound of every single passing car and honking horn was carried to my ears. In the end, I got so accustomed to it that now it seems odd to sleep in silence.

Riding a car in Georgia. Hmm. Let's just say, it's a good thing they have horns! Just imagine every crazy, lane-weaving, horn-honking, brake-slamming driver you've ever met, and put them all out onto one road. Welcome to Georgia, folks. Not to fear, though! I had some wonderful, very alert Georgians taking care of me. I was actually glad to have my hand held while I crossed the street, even though it's something I haven't done since I was about 6 years old.

It is impossible to come to completely understand a culture in 2 weeks, to understand exactly what people are thinking and what drives them. However, I can give you some observations from my visit to Georgia. I saw a people held together by the tradition of their faith in Jesus Christ, who had been the one constant through the centuries of persecution. For Georgians, there is no separation between religion and the rest of life; their Christian faith and tradition is an identity. A joyful and celebratory attitude has supported them through the hard years, and a strong sense of family and love has kept them together and strong. I have been very blessed indeed to have even this small glimpse into the heart of the Georgian people.

Photo submitted by: Chelsea Bartlett

at 5a.m. her mother was already up waiting for us and had prepared an entire meal for me already. After some hajapuri (delicious cheese Riffle is a junior majoring in intercultural studies. She is studying abroad in Lithuania this semester.

A new place to study could be the answer

James Kennedy

The bell rings, the professor walks in, and you realize that you are now back into an arena of intellectual battle of which there is no escape. Many different people, whether through the Internet, news, or the classroom, will try to persuade you to believe what they would like you to think is the truth. Let's be honest; the only way to believe something is to understand it. We come to understand "it" by independent studying outside of the classroom.

But then again, do we really know how to study?

I started to find that I had an almost impossible time getting anything done in my room. I would go there to work out a paper, and then find that I'm on Facebook several hours later with minimal work accomplished. Studying has been steadily decreasing since the 60s, when an average was about 24 hours of studying a week! Just how many hours would you say the average college student studies now?

Answer: Not even half that.

We are more socially adept in culture as a whole with the inventions of Facebook and other social networking sites that our time is being divided up more and more each year. Students find time for leisure, sports and dating, and studying keeps getting pushed off to the side.

Allie Grasgreen of Formerly Outside The Classroom states:

"... there are negative consequences, too: increased substance use, decreased academic engagement, and decreased professional preparedness. ([Todd] Wyatt recalled his students in a developmental psychology class, who included text jargon and emoticons in their reflection papers.) 'One of the main reasons why students aren't spending as much time studying is they don't know how to study,' Wyatt said. 'They don't know how to study efficiently."

If that wasn't a wake up call to you, then maybe something else will do. Out of 34 countries, the U.S. Ranked 14th in reading, 17th in science, and 25th in math according to scores from the 2009 Programme for International Student Assessment. We are behind such countries as South Korea, Finland, Singapore and China. For being citizens of one of the largest super powers in the world, we as students need to step up and study like we are. Many of these countries have much stricter policies concerning school and studies, but that is no excuse for us when we have the freedom to study whatever we choose.

As I said before, I found it near impossible for me to study cooped up in my room for hours on end; I found a new place to study. I now enjoy studying in places where there is a steady flow of people, whether it be a student center, or the main area in my living complex. I feel like people are watching me work, so of course I want to impress them. I call it the "working spotlight" effect.

So as you go into the new semester, make sure it counts. If you are having trouble studying in one place, try a new one! It just might make all the difference.

Kennedy is a senior majoring in communication. He can be reached at KennedyJ@jbu.edu

New thoughts on an old favorite: hard boiled eggs

Samuel Dinger

Let's start with boiled eggs.

To make sure I knew what I was talking about, I went down the hall to the kitchen to boil an egg. I whipped out my trusty saucepan given me by my mother (one of my parents' wedding presents that's still kicking). I filled it about two thirds of the way up (enough to have extra water for a cup of tea before I dunk the eggs) and set it on the frontright burner.

My arm found a pretty cup and the Kenyan black tea a good friend brought to me from her faraway home as I awaited the heating water. I poured off some water into the blueberry painted mug and watched the bag bob and release black ribbons melting into water. Tea steeping, water boiling again, I plopped an egg into the hot tub-then another, remembering how delicious they are. Seven minutes on the clock to wait. I love to wait for things such as this. I think I have spent as much time as others have spent brushing their teeth or reading the newspaper in a lifetime, squatting in front of the oven or tending a pot on the stove.

There are as many methods for boiling eggs as there are for skinning cats. I used the one a friend told me last week. My momma learned on our trip to Germany this past summer that one should put the eggs in cold water in the pan and bring them to boil from there. Once the water reaches the chatty 212 degrees, they're done. My seven minutes of cooking in already-boiling water got me eggs over easy (or perhaps over medium). Great news! One of the things that kept me away from eggs cooked this way in the past was their chalky yolk. These were the consistency of slightly warm peanut butter, felt like velvet, and tasted like butter.

My eyes were only just opened to the marvels of the boiled egg. Previously, I had only thought of them invariably linked to the stinky egg salad my dad makes periodically or the potato salad I once repelled or the deviled eggs I only recently tried. I've a history of picky eating. Last week was the first time I'd truly tasted them-and on my own prerogative. I ended up eating four, dripping Cholula hot sauce and buttery yolk down my chin, for supper.

Book worms, studiers, dormlivers, shut-ins, rejoice! You could make these in your little hot-water kettle you use for Ramen. Also, upon a little reflection and simple math, I found that supper costing me less than a quarter. That is, if you don't factor in the cost of the hotsauce and if you buy your eggs from Aldi.

I've been surprised time and again with the simplest of foods and the humblest of ingredients. With each new adventure-tasting something I should have tasted before, I shake my fist at my picky childhood. But there is something fun about a belated exposure to new (or newly appreciated) little treasures. I can't wait for the next one.

Dinger is a junior majoring in business administration He can be reached at DingerS@jbu.edu

September 6, 2012

Page 6 LIFESTYLES

The Threefold Advocate

New resident directors find community at JBU

Hannah Wright Staff Writer

wrighth@jbu.edu

This fall, John Brown University hired new Resident Directors for both Walker Hall and Hutcheson Hall: Andrew Lehr and Meredith Baltz.

Potential applicants were interviewed by Director of Resident Life Andre Broquard, former and current resident assistants, representative students and several staff members, including President Pollard.

Lehr and Baltz were chosen out of 28 applicants. Broquard said he looked for applicants with not only educational and work experience but also people who would bring "wisdom to the position." Broquard called both of the new RDs "good fits to the institution."

Meredith Baltz

Baltz arrived on campus feeling completely prepared to be a resident director, but that preparation did not come the way she expected.

Baltz became interested in being a resident director after several friends gave her shining desciptions of the position. At the time, she was earning her master's degree in higher education and student development at Taylor University, along with Lehr and his wife, Maria.

"I really felt called to connect with students on a deeper level," Baltz said. "I wanted a job I could use as ministry." After several interviews and an "excruciating" wait, Baltz was awarded the position in April and began her preparations.

Then, in June, her plans were abruptly halted by a serious car accident.

The accident left Baltz with a broken back and she was bedridden for several weeks. There was

The incident was devastating. "I didn't know if I was going to be able to come [to the University]," Baltz said. "But the Lord is good and I've healed really well."

Baltz also said the accident gave her a new perspective on her position as a resident director. "The car accident has been the best preparation," she explained. "The Lord prepared me in a way I didn't expect."

Now, Baltz is enjoying her new job at Hutcheson Hall and is hindered little by her injuries. She expressed special appreciation for her resident assistants.

"It's been a blessing so far to watch them love this building and love their students," she said.

Baltz looks forward to further interaction with her "Hutchhikers," a new nickname for residents of the dorm formerly known as North, and is eager to continue her ministry among the students.

Andrew Lehr

The University's community atmosphere made an impression on Lehr when he first came to the University.

"From the moment I stepped on campus it felt like a good fit," Lehr said.

As an undergraduate student at Taylor University, Lehr served as a resident assistant for two and a half years. His time there cultivated an interest for higher education. He looked for resident life positions all over the country while earning his master's degree, applying for as many as he could.

John Brown University stuck out because it was small, Christian and held employment opportunities for his wife, Maria.

"It definitely looked like a place where we wanted to be," Lehr said.

through, tragedy struck. A friend from Taylor University passed away.

Though he was distressed by this news, Lehr continued the interview process, and was surprised when the University's community rose up to support him.

"I didn't even know these people and they were taking care of me and loving me," he said. When offered the job, he readily accepted.

Lehr is relishing his work in Walker Hall. He said one of the dangers of being a resident director at some universities is becoming nothing more than a "party planner." His job here is much more significant than that.

"I love that I'm viewed as an educator," Lehr said. "I was glad JBU wanted a res life program that was...more than just administrative tasks."

As Lehr settles in, he hopes to create a "classroom outside of the classroom" atmosphere in Walker. He looks forward to cultivating and thriving in Walker's community.

STEPHANIE WILLIS/The Threefold Advocate

no nerve damage, but she is currently wearing a back brace.

Lehr came in for the strenuous interview process, but halfway

Meredith Baltz (above) and Andrew Lehr (below) join the JBU family as the new resident directors of Hutcheson and Walker Hall. They met each other while attending Taylor University alongside with Lehr's wife, Maria, pictured with Lehr.

Clarensau Jenny Redfern Editor-in-Chief RedfernJ@jbu.edu

ABBY CHESNUT/The Threefold Advocate

Wichita trio Clarensau graced students with their harmonic melodies Aug. 24 at the University's welcome back concert sponsored by BLUE. Lead singer and guitarist Tyler Clarensau discussed his songwriting in further detail.

Q: What is your greatest inspiration?

'Emotions' is the perfect way to say it. I write a lot of songs and usually the ones we don't end up using-the ones that end up in the garbage—are the ones that I don't really care about because they don't mean anything to me. And that translates into not a very good song. So, more than any other musician or artist, the emotions of life.

Q: Can you describe your new album?

A: I would call it a commitment record. The title track, "This One's For You," I wrote for someone close to me who kind of... made some really bad choices. Instead of getting closer to us... had alienated themselves even farther from us. So this song is essentially "this one's for you and I hope you hear it and I hope it helps you realize you're not too far gone..."

Q: What are your dreams as a band?

Would we like to be really big and make enough money where we could just do this all the time? Probably. But at the same time I think we've found a level of being content with sometimes playing a show for one person. Hopefully, there is more than one person in the room, but playing it for that one person these songs mean something to.

September 6, 2012

Page 7 LIFESTYLES The Threefold Advocate

15

10

MAIN STRET

Kelsey Gulliver Lifestyles Editor

gulliverk@jbu.edu

Downtown Siloam Springs has witnessed a variety of changes over the past few months, many even in the past week. Some businesses have closed, others opened, some expanded and some are under new ownership.

Nonetheless, the area is thriving. Meredith Bergstrom, executive director of Main Street Siloam Springs, said the district did not experience its usual dip in traffic during the summer months.

"Downtown is the reason I stayed after graduating from JBU," Bergstrom said.

The following offers a look at Pour Jon's Coffee and Tea Pub, one of the thriving local businesses that is undergoing a few changes.

New Owners

About 10 years after moving to Siloam Springs, Ark., Chris Moore sits at a table in Pour Jon's Coffee and Tea Pub. Working for a local heating and air company until just a few months ago, Moore is now the owner of the local coffee joint. "I wanted to try something new," he explained.

The previous owners contacted Moore at the beginning of June, while Moore was on a mission trip in Thailand. In July, he took over the local business, situated at 223 North Wright Street, Siloam Springs, Ark.

Along with his wife Jen, who graduated from John Brown University in 2005, and their daughter Bella, age 2, Moore has been mastering the ins and outs of running a coffeehouse. He described the past two months as a positive learning experience, and is thankful not only to his family for their support, but also to the former employees who have stayed on and are helping him learn the ropes.

J. Pablo Garcia/THREEFOLD ADVOCATE

Chris Moore, the new owner of Pour Jon's Coffee and Tea Pub sits upstairs in the new addition to the business. Scheduled to open before the end of September, Moore hopes the new space will provide customers with more space to relax, enjoy their coffee and listen to music.

current design downstairs, exposed brick and a stained plywood floor currently define the space; as does a vintage upright piano, which has been appointed for community use.

Upon its completion, the large and graffiti created by a friend of Moore will blend with the aroma of coffee to provide the exact atmosphere that the new owner desires.

New Events

they wear, a password or some other sign.

A vintage fashion show with another downtown business, Amandromeda, will also happen later in the fall. Moore mentioned other possible events such as a Halloween party, karaoke and movie nights. Both Bergstrom and Moore emphasized the concept of "third place" for downtown Siloam Springs as a whole and for Pour Jon's, respectively. People have their homes and places of work, but they also need another place to go and socialize with members of the community outside of those two normal spheres.

town business.

Pour Jon's will also soon begin a loyalty card program. Customers will get punches for buying a variety of drinks, and as a reward will receive exclusive merchandise from the coffeehouse.

New Space

Possibly the most notable change at Pour Jon's will be the additional space provided by an ongoing expansion. Bergstrom and Moore are pleased about the revitalization of the building's previously vacant second floor.

The new staircase, almost finished, leads up to a space similar in size to the first floor. Similar to the room will contain a second mini coffee bar, a meeting table and a selection of couches and chairs, but will also boast a larger stage and a vinyl record store.

Moore has been building up a stockpile of records for several years now with the intentions of opening a record store in Siloam Springs. Pour Jon's has provided him the opportunity to do so.

Shelves with built-in dividers will provide easy access for customers flipping through the intermixed collection of classic and contemporary records. A listening station will allow the customers to actually listen to the music on-site.

Album covers, acoustic panels

With its expansion, including a larger stage and dedicated sound system and mixer, Moore plans to market Pour Jon's as a music venue. The ultimate goal would be at least one concert a week. Moore is also excited to have other groups besides bands, such as theatre groups or poetry societies, bring life to the space.

"Me and my wife love to throw parties," Moore said. "There are a lot of funky things I want to do."

One of the first events Moore plans would be the second floor launch party, expected around the end of September. Described as a secret party, guests will have to figure out how to get in based on what

New Offers

Moore is currently working on a few changes to the menu, including new smoothie flavors.

The pastries offered are now made by 28 Springs, another down-

New Beginnings

"When I first came [to Pour Jon's], I thought, this is everything I love," said Moore, who has always felt connected with the quirky personality of the coffeehouse.

Moore is eager to continue on the legacy of Pour Jon's and to also be part of an area that he described as energetic and revitalized. He, along with other business owners and Bergstrom strive towards the goal of Main Street Siloam Springs: "Enhance downtown, where community springs to life."

J. Pablo Garcia/THREEFOLD ADVOCATE

Customers enjoy the wide range of cuisine and trendy atmosphere at the newest Siloam Springs restaurant, 28 Springs. The latest food hot spot is operated by the notable Chef Miles James who is known for his signature Ozark Platea.

UP AND DOWN MAIN

Books on Broadway closed on Wednesday, Aug. 29. Cafe on Broadway owners Rick and Carolyn Robinson have taken over the space formerly occupied by Books on Broadway and are keeping around 5,000 titles.

28 Springs opened this summer. The restaraunt offers "five star presentation, but at a not five star price," explained Floor Manager Devon Staner The menu rangesfrom chicken fingers to a $28 dollar steak.

*Sidney Van Wyk

20

CYAN PLATE MAGENTA PLATE 30 BLACK PLATE 15

SPORTS The Threefold Advocate

Eagles to host Fall Classic

Lacey Fryer Staff Writer fryerl@jbu.edu

The John Brown University Golden Eagles will go into the annual Quality Inn Fall Classic this weekend with three wins under their belt. At the Fall Classic, JBU will be facing Northwestern College (Iowa) and Union University (Tenn.).

Northwestern, a team in the Great Plains Athletic Conference did not have any seniors on the team last year. Then junior Mario Garcia led the team in goals with 19 and former freshman Gabriel Goncalvez followed with 11.

Union beat Ouachita Baptist 2-0 in their opener and played Lincoln Memorial to a scoreless draw after two overtimes. The Union Bulldogs are making the transition into the NCAA Division II and Gulf South Conference this year after they finished 5th in the TranSouth Conference last season. The team lost its starting goalie, but teammates still look to senior Guilherme Reis, who was last year's leading scorer with a total of 9 goals.

As for the JBU Eagles, they are currently 3-0. Captain Luke Theimer, a junior, is the top scorer with three goals this season. Sophomores Martin Gonzalez and Ryan Duncan have two goals each.

John Miglarese sees the team conforming more to the coaching staff's vision for the program.

RON ASBILL/The Threefold Advocate

20

15

September 6, 2012

10

Sophomore Martin Gonzalez fights off a defender as Team Captain junior Luke Theimer looks on in pursuit. Gonzalez and Theimer , along with freshman Zari Prescod (not pictured) are leading the Eagles in goals with six points to each. The Eagles are currently 3-0 going into a three-game homestand at the Quality Inn Fall Classic.

"The team is starting to play and act more like we've envisioned as a coaching staff. We want to be fun to watch, we want to be competitive, we want to have great team culture, and we want people to be excited about us on campus because of how we play and who we are."

The tournament will be held at Alumni Field, where the Eagles will take on the Northwestern Red Raiders Friday at 4 p.m. The Eagles will then play the Union Bulldogs the following day at the same time.

Volleyball ready for tourney

OFFICE OF SPORTS INFORMATION

The Lady Eagles pose in downtown Siloam Spring for their team picture. The team currently has a winning record of 8-1 and is ranked 25th in the NAIA Division I. Their first opponent this weekend, Graceland (lowa), is ranked 17th and has a record of 2-0. Both teams are ranked at the top of their conference.

Sidney Van Wyk Sports Editor wyks@jbu.edu

This weekend the Lady Eagles will travel to Baldwin City, Kan. with an 8-1 record. There they will face off with four other teams. Their first game is against Graceland University (Iowa) and is likely to be the most competitive game of the tournament.

Graceland is ranked 17th in the NAIA Division I, along with being ranked first in the Heart of America Conference. John Brown University is ranked 25th in Division I and is first in the Sooner Athletic Conference. For JBU, senior Erin Didier is currently leading the Lady Eagle's offensively with 139 total kills, followed by fellow senior Audrey Deardien with 125. Didier also had the most kills of any team in last week's tournament.

While talking about JBU's performance last weekend, Head Coach Staci Johnson said part of the reason these two were able to make so many kills was due to the team's passing. "Communications amongst our defense has been the key to our successful passing," said Johnson. "Not only do the great passes allow us to feed our outside hitters the ball, but our middle blockers, Erin [McIlroy] and Libby [Blasingame], do a phenomenal job of holding the block."

Johnson went on say that this gives Didier and Deardien a one-on-one ball to translate into another kill for the Lady Eagles.

Sophomore Becca Young is currently leading JBU defensively with 99 total digs, followed by Didier with 86.

Graceland currently sits at 2-0 after their last match against

Avila (Mo.). Their current leaders on offense are Kendra Martin with seven kills, followed by Kelsi Martin with six. On the defensive, Kelsi leads in digs with 17 total and also holds four blocks, just short of Allie Krabbenhoft who has five and is even with Moriah Jones. As a team they are ranked first in NAIA Division I for blocks per game while Kendra Martin is second in the division for her hitting percentage. The Lady Eagles will play Benedictine (Kan.) after their match against Graceland on Friday.

For Benedictine, who had a record of 1-6 as of press time, Karlie Dalton is currently leading her team offensively with 38 kills followed by teammate Carly Steinlage with 27. Cassie Rockers leads defensively with 67 digs followed by Sara Navinskey with 24. Benedictine has only faced one team, Doane (Neb.) with a truly substantial winning record of 11-1. Benedictine is currently ranked second to last in the Heart of America Conference, directly above Central Methodist (Mo.). After facing Graceland and Benedictine on Friday, JBU will take on Baker (Kan.) and Friends (Kan.) on Saturday. Baker, also in the Heart of America Conference, sits at 4-4 while Friends has a record of 0-4 as of press time. Crystal Simons of Baker is currently leading in kills with 68 after passing teammate Savannah Smith who has 66 total kills. Renata Dill leads defensively with a total of 131 digs followed by Simons with 81.

Baker depends on their defensive play, with a high number of blocks and digs per game, especially from Danielle French who is ranked ninth in Division

Nicole Kosin Women's Soccer

Freshman mid-fielder Nicole Kosin scored the Lady Eagles's lone goal of the season. Kosin's goal came off of a header from a corner kick against Harding last Monday.

I for her 37 total blocks. Friends is currently eighth in the Kansas Collegiate Athletics Conference. Out of their four losses, three have ended without Friends winning a single set.

Jada Witham leads her team in kill with 38 while teammate Crystal Taporco follows with 25 total kills. Defensively, Bailey Burnett leads with 43 digs followed closely by Ila Sturges with 40.

The first game of this weekend's tournament will begin at 9 a.m. on Friday with the Lady Eagles facing Graceland on Court 1 while Benedictine faces Friends on Court 2.

30 20

15 10

N NA

50

MAGENTA PLATE

30

BLACK PLATE

September 6, 2012

Page 9 SPORT The Threefold Advocate

10

Robinson checks in for sports info

STEPHANIS WILLIS/The Threefold Advocate

Nicholas Robinson, the new sports information director, poses with his hockey stick. Robinson played NCAA Hockey at Calvin College in Grand Rapids, MI. "As a former hockey player in college, I never let anyone push me around, said Robinson, "I may only be 5' 9", but I would skate between their legs if I had to."

Jon Skinner

Sports Editor skinnerj@jbu.edu

His alma mater's big game is one of college basketball's fiercest rivalries. Now his new school's big game is one of college basketball's quirkiest traditions.

John Brown's new sports information director, Nicholas Robinson, graduated from Calvin College in Grand Rapids, Mich., whose rivalry with nearby Hope College is arguably the fiercest small college rivalry in the nation. According to Robinson, Calvin College "could sell out a chess match" against Hope College. As sports information director, he hopes to bring that kind of excitement (and attendance) to John Brown Athletics.

Robinson was previously the assistant sports information director at Graceland University in Iowa, where he "fell in love with sports information."

Now it is his responsibility to promote John Brown's athletes.

Robinson believes the quality of Golden Eagles athletics speaks for itself.

"We've got a lot of awesome kids here and they put their guts, their sweat, [and] their tears out on the court or the field every time they play," said Robinson. "It is my job to make sure that everybody that is within my power to reach hears what an awesome story [the athletes] bring to the table."

Robyn Daugherty, director of athletics, said one reason Robinson, a first-time sports information head director, was chosen was because he fit with the University's culture.

Daugherty said that Robinson is someone that is "going to fit within our culture and within our institution and is going to take us to the next level."

Along with adding Robinson's expertise in social media, the athletic department feels he has the ability to help them to "continue to raise the bar" in other areas as well.

"Raising the bar", according to Daugherty, means an increased presence is social media for the athletic department and an increase in quality in all media productions.

When they hired Robinson, the athletic department "found someone who had the skills to take us to the next level, whether that's on social media or on the web," said

Daugherty. "He has great photography skills, he has great writing skill, he has great design skills, and he knows the web [and] social media."

Besides an increased presence in social media, Daugherty wants increased visibility for the athletic program.

"It is my job to make sure that when our teams do well and do the right things that as many people know about it through as many vehicles as necessary," said Robinson.

What attracted Robinson to John Brown was the Christian culture that is not only foundational to the school but also permeates the way students interact with faculty and staff.

"Kids love the school, they love to play the sports that God has given them the talents for and they love to be in a place where there are like-minded people," said Robinson. "Everybody can talk about, live, experience, and engage Christ [at JBU]. That is important to me. If a student athlete comes in and [has] a problem and ... wants to talk about it we can have a serious heart-to-heart and talk about our Christian beliefs."

Along with all the new forms of communication and higher quality level production that Robinson will be implementing, the personal aspect of his job will make adaptability paramount.

"This job is so ever-evolving that it comes down to if you can keep up with it," said Robinson. "I like to think I have the mental fortitude to do that."

105565 Itav

Jon Skinner Sports Editor skinnerj@jbu.edu

A current conference shakeup may find John Brown Athletics between a rock and a hard place later.

The Sooner Athletic Conference, of which the University is a member, is at a crossroads.

As of next season, the conference will be down to seven schools, having lost five schools in two seasons.

SAC is in its first season after losing Northwestern Oklahoma State, Oklahoma Christian, and Southern Nazarene to NCAA Division II conferences. This season is the last for Rogers State and Lubbock Christian, who will also join NCAA Division II next season.

With the conference scrambling to find new teams, John Brown Athletics finds itself in a new role and in an unfamiliar situation.

"We're the anchor [of the conference] at this point," said Nicholas Robinson, sports information director. "Things are going to be drastically changing next year."

"[The SAC] could be totally different in a year," said Robyn Daugherty, director of athletics.

The current situation in the SAC is not a case of failure but of too much success, according to Robinson

Robinson said the schools in the conference are finding so much success that they need to recruit at a higher level that only NCAA membership can provide. As a result, they are leaving the SAC and National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA).

"It is a bittersweet situation... [the SAC is] bleeding teams out of the NAIA," said Robinson.

The uncertainty of the situation means the University is looking at alternatives in case it finds itself without a conference in a couple of years.

"Everything hinges on what happens next year," said Robinson, "We've got two choices in front of us: We stay and recruit new conference members, or we leave and add football."

Having to add football is a "possibility," according to Robinson, because of two factors: geography and loyalty to the NAIA.

There are already a handful of conferences close enough to make athlete travel times manageable, but with the exception of the Heartland Conference, all require football as a collegiate sport. The University, however, is not in the process of developing a football program.

"Right now, we don't see the need for football yet," said Daugherty.

The University is not opposed to football, though, and could add it if it needed to in order to join a conference, according to Daugherty.

"[Adding football is] definitely a big hurdle, but it's not something ... that is off the table," said Daughtery.

Conversely, The Heartland Conference does not sponsor football and is geographically very similar to the SAC, but is an NCAA Division II conference. Leaving the NAIA would mean leaving a conference with a similar philosophy to the University.

"The NAIA runs completely parallel with [JBU's] mission," said Robinson, "A lot of times people [leave the NAIA] just ... because they want that blue NCAA [logo] on their website."

The connection to the NAIA is not only a similarity in beliefs but also an affinity for the personal touch in recruiting that NAIA membership affords.

"A lot of student athletes come to John Brown because our coaches go out to their homes and show genuine interest in them and want to see them succeed on and off the field," said Robinson. "You just simply can't do that as a member of the NCAA."

"The best option is to rebuild the SAC," said Robinson. "We have a lot of hard decisions to make if we can't."

The SAC is likely to survive, though, and the conference is already seeking new teams.

"[The SAC] commissioner is actively pursuing new members in conjunction with the Athletic Directors and the presidents of the SAC,' said Daugherty.

The athletic directors of the conference schools will meet September 12th, where new members could be announced.

Lady Eagles prepare for early season battle

Lacey Fryer Staff Writer fryerl@jbu.edu

Two young teams will face off in women's soccer this coming Saturday. The John Brown University Lady Eagles will take on the University of the Ozarks Lady Eagles this Saturday, September 8 at Alumni Field.

A team of mostly sophomores and freshmen, the Ozark Lady Eagles finished last season with a record of 3-16 in the American Southwest Conference This year, many of their star players have returned. Sophomores Brooke Tralmer and Scotti-Lynn Burnside are reported to be standouts on the defensive line, and head Coach Bryan Drotar believes junior Monica Seiler will be 'fierce'.

"Monica is confident and she is poised for another good year. She is a tough, physical defender. She is fast and also gives us the ability to attack out of the back," said Drotar.

He believes the team has some great defenders, but Drotar is a little concerned about the U of O offense.

"We will have to learn to score by committee. I don't think it will be just one single player that is scoring a lot of goals, but rather several players," said Drotar.

As of press time, the team had a record of 0-3.

Last season for the Golden Eagles, three freshmen lead the team in goals: Laura Garcia with 17, followed by Adrienne Kennedy with 12 and Casey O'Brien with 11.

All three have returned this year as sophomores, but it is Garcia that continues to be a primary scoring threat. In the three games played as of press time, Garcia lead the team with two goals. Head Coach Scott Marksberry has noticed her performance.

"Laura looks so dangerous right now. As a sophomore, she understands her role and has executed perfectly timed runs," said Marksberry, "We look for her to continue her impressive play."

But Garcia is not the only player who has proven herself so far this season. O'Brien took the place of senior Cheyenne Padgett due to an injury in the game versus Trinity Christian (Ill.).

"Casey O'Brien did a marvelous job in [Padgett's] absence against Trinity Christian" said Marksberry. "Casey has distributed the ball well and defended well."

JBU and U of O face off this Saturday here at JBU at 1 p.m..

10

OFFICE OF SPORTS INFORMATION

BLACK PLATE

10

15

Sophomore Casey O'Brien dribbles past a defender in a preseason game against a local club team. Their first win of the regular season came on Monday against Harding (Ark.).

30

20

MAGENTA PLATE

20 15

Page 10 POTLIGHT The Threefold Advocate

20

15

10

Written by: Abby Fennema

Students first coined the term "JBU bubble" to refer to the tendency to stay inside the John Brown University community.

The Student Ministries Leadership Team is attempting to "burst the bubble" by encouraging students to reach outside of the University and volunteer in the community of Siloam Springs.

Junior Adam Hodge, the outreach ministry intern on SMLT this year, planned the second annual volunteer fair.

is to celebrate the different volunteer organizations in the area, as well as to connect the faculty and students with the directors of these organizations in attempt

Designed by: Kara Underwood

Volunteer Fair Helps Burst

the body of JBU," said Hodge. "We want to recognize the work that the Lord is doing off-campus, by bringing them on-campus and showing them our appreciation and support."

To kick off the volunteer fair, Joe Butler, founder of the Ability Tree, an organization which enables families that have children with disabilities, spoke in chapel Aug. 30.

Butler challenged students "The goal of the Volunteer Fair to, "start giving just one hour a week or more, [because] it might change your life."

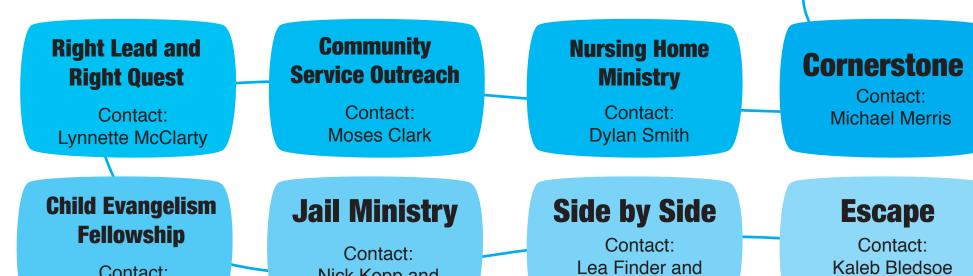

> Butler said every good story starts with stumbling upon a passion. This is true in Butler's own to offer more outreach options to life. Ability Tree began with a new awareness and heart for disabled children after Butler's son, Micah, was diagnosed with developmental delays.

> Micah's attentiveness to others with special needs-a group of people who are usually marginalized-gave Butler a passion to have eyes for those often unseen.

> "I have learned more from [his] 11 year old than [he] has from anyone in [his] life besides God," Butler said.

From Butler's personal experience and new-found passion he started a non-profit that serves families with disabilities in Siloam Springs.

September 6, 2012

10

Contact: Mikayla Roberts	Contact: Nick Kopp and Meredith Sloan	Lea Finder and Maria Alecio Romero	Kaleb Bledsoe
M D S C N S	Partners in Prayers Contact: Laura Nelson	Great Abandon Contact: Lisa Mayhue	JBU Nature Society Contact: Cody Bowlin and Brian Morsman
tries	Bridges to Wellness Emerson Goodwin 479-549-3143 office@bridgestowellness.org	American Red Cross Linda Morgan 479-306-4688, ext. 207 travis.cooper@redcross.org	Kind At Heart Ministries Wayne Thomas 479-238-4608 wayne@kinatheart.org
ship	New Beginnings Pregnancy Services Melissa Horton 479-549-3322 Melissa@ssnewbeginnings.org	Ability Tree Joe Butler 479-373-6033 joebutler@abilitytree.org	Siloam Springs Senior Activity Center Kathy Patterson 479-524-5735 Sac2@cox-internet.com
Community Clinic Siloam Springs Medical Raquel Beck 479-524-9550 x 6357 rbeck@communityclinicnwa.org	Siloam Springs Children's Center Mary Nolan 479-524-6354 directorsscc@cox-internet.com		EXIT Our mission is
Main Street Siloam Springs Meredith Bergstrom 479-524-4556 meredith@mainstreetsiloam.com	Dogwood Literacy Council, Inc. John Marter 479-524-4009 dogwood.literacy@gmail.com		to help grow able families and accessible churches
Northwest Arkansas Head Start Amy Sasser 479-636-7317	Genesis House, Inc. Melissa Horton 479-549-3322 Melissa@ssnewbeginnings.org		through recreation education, sup on and training

Photographer: Ana Samayoa

20

15

40

30

10

asasser@nwaheadstart.org

Melissa@ssnewbeginnings.org

10

20

15

30

40